Symrise Diana Food to present new data on the relationship between gut health and immune system

- Webinar with Vitafoods Insight scheduled for November 3rd
- Connects scientific evidence with consumer behavior trends
- Underpins the leading role in natural solutions addressing gut health and the immune system

Symrise Diana Food announces its participation in a scientific webinar. It covers the role of gut health for the immune system and connects consumer trends with novel scientific evidence. The webinar is scheduled for November 3, 2021, at 11am GMT. Vitafoods Insight will host the presentation and address professionals who want to inform themselves about latest developments.

Entitled “Driving the future of immunity: Is gut health the next solution?”, this webinar will explain how consumers are increasingly looking for products that benefit their immune system and gut health. Webinar participants will learn how scientific evidence on polyphenols connects these two seemingly disparate health goals.

Scientific data shows that the immune system and a healthy microbiota are interconnected, with new scientific evidence proving the importance polyphenols play in optimizing the immune system. The webinar will connect this data with latest consumer trends and purchasing behaviors, driving the need for a holistic approach to immune health.

Teresa Kilgore, Head of Global Health and Nutrition Marketing at Symrise Diana Food, and Denis Guyonnet, PhD, the Scientific and Innovation Director at Diana Nova will host the webinar. According to Ms. Kilgore, “The role of gut health for the immune system represents a new and exciting concept. Those who attend this webinar will walk away with a better understanding of how manufacturers can create innovative products as solutions continue to flood the market that want to promote the immune system.”

Symrise Diana Food will present this webinar in partnership with Vitafoods Insights. To register, click here.
